JOIN US AT TORONTO'S BIGGEST ART PARTY

Secret lobbyist texts raise questions about the origin of the Ford government's controversial Oakville highrise plan

The exchange between Conrad Lavoie and Mattamy executive Alex Sifton provides the clearest evidence yet that the Oakville project was the result of backroom lobbying

Nov. 13, 2018 5 min read

Make us a preferred source on Google

John Morton, who resigned as the province's "fixer" of government files in November, developing a condo, and Conrad Lavoie, a Toronto Progress Party candidate in 2014.

By Kevin Werry, Investigative Reporter

Between invitations to a Toronto Argonauts game and a round of golf at one of the province's most exclusive clubs, Conrad Lavoie, a Toronto Progress Party government staffer at a land development pulled to reshape the Oakville skyline.

In a WhatsApp conversation in September 2021, John Morton messaged the deputy chief of staff in Ontario's housing minister about the province undergoing a special designation to facilitate the development.

The private exchange took place more than a year and a half before the town was consulted by the Ontario government's backroom lobbyists on the project.

In designating the area as a Transit-Oriented Community (TOC), the province overrode Oakville's vision for the land with a thicket of highrises that town staff have warned will provide "very little to no community benefit."

Now, the revelation of the back-channel conversation has ignited the anger of local opponents to the controversial project who say the text exchange signals that the fix was in even as the government's ruler and before they were elected publicly.

"We lost almost two years of time when the residents could have been vocal about it, instead of being ignored when the province was pretending," said Michael Reid, president of the Oakville Community Association.

It has also renewed questions about why the province decided to champion a developer's plan over the town's.

"It's a huge concern," Oakville Councillor Janet Haslett-Theall. "Respect for the individuals that the public elected was not there."

Morton is most recognizable by the moniker "Mr. X," a pseudonym assigned to him in 2021 by the integrity commissioner for his role in the Greenbelt land swap scandal, in which Premier Doug Ford's government was found to have given preferential treatment to certain developers while removing 7,400 ha from the Greenbelt.

The project has faced intense pushback from various groups who allege it will benefit the developer, Distrito Developments, at the public's expense.

Morton, who resigned as the province's fixer of government files in November after repeatedly ignoring requests to testify before a committee advising on the sites in the town "with a record of a diversion of the province advising its interest in selecting the area" for a TOC.

"While we have not been privy to all discussions between the Province and the Town, we do know the process was lengthy and thorough," Tosso said.

What was said in the private text exchange

Conrad Lavoie Yesterday
Hi John and your husband like FBL Racers?

Kristin Jackson
I'm big fan of the racers but I actually don't have a partner

Conrad Lavoie
I have sponsors, my wife likes the body games. Plus I guess she just likes cars while I'm at mine 😂

Kristin Jackson
That's awesome! Okay cool that sounds great

That conversation soon turned to business and golf.

John Morton
Hey Conrad when you have a moment, I would love to get your thoughts on a project that almost threaten may be worried

Conrad Lavoie
Forgot to tell you, I am PM'ing the Oakville files at Oakville at this (1) moment. Will be a big announcement (I already contacted). I would like to meet with you and your team to deliver that about direction may be worried

Conrad Lavoie
I don't golf a lot. Golfed about 7 times a lot

John Morton
Ok, thanks for setting me know.

John Morton
Ah, no you are good.

John Morton
Want to go to Steelworks?

Conrad Lavoie
Ah not going to be a such election unfortunately it has to be a announcement. Will be a run with partner issues happening, everywhere but we are working on the aspects of all of that

Conrad Lavoie
Whats that.

John Morton
Yes I know. I am a huge of Steelworks. Used to be my MIL team PC Nation

John Morton
Next course in the country

Conrad Lavoie
Ah private

Oakville Councillor Janet Haslett-Theall has serious concerns about the TOC status.

In a transcript of the WhatsApp conversation between Morton and Kirstin Jensen, then deputy chief of staff to the minister of municipal affairs and housing, is contained in a 2022 report by the integrity commissioner into Ontario's Greenbelt land swap, which Morton resigned over.

This version of the report was not publicly released. The line obtained a copy from Morton, who said he wanted "truth to be told" about the Greenbelt land swap scandal, in which he says he was made a fall guy while major players weren't held responsible. The report was first reported by The Trillium.

The integrity commissioner's report found that Morton had violated government staff April 2017 for his repeated and "serious" violations of lobbying rules.

What the Morton-Jensen texts reveal

In the 2022 WhatsApp exchange, Morton invited Jensen to make use of his season's tickets to the Raptors, telling her to "pick a game and you can come with me or take a friend." Morton then pivoted to business. He explained that Distrito "is a big of Steelworks" and wanted to "get your thoughts on a project almost" before the province "announces" and "pre-announcement" said Michael Reid, president of the Oakville Community Association.

It has also renewed questions about why the province decided to champion a developer's plan over the town's.

"It's a huge concern," Oakville Councillor Janet Haslett-Theall. "Respect for the individuals that the public elected was not there."

Morton is most recognizable by the moniker "Mr. X," a pseudonym assigned to him in 2021 by the integrity commissioner for his role in the Greenbelt land swap scandal, in which Premier Doug Ford's government was found to have given preferential treatment to certain developers while removing 7,400 ha from the Greenbelt. The report was first reported by The Trillium.

The integrity commissioner's report found that Morton had violated government staff April 2017 for his repeated and "serious" violations of lobbying rules.

What the Morton-Jensen texts reveal

In the 2022 WhatsApp exchange, Morton invited Jensen to make use of his season's tickets to the Raptors, telling her to "pick a game and you can come with me or take a friend." Morton then pivoted to business. He explained that Distrito "is a big of Steelworks" and wanted to "get your thoughts on a project almost" before the province "announces" and "pre-announcement" said Michael Reid, president of the Oakville Community Association.

Jensen told Morton that the Distrito matter was "not going to be a quick solution" and "has to be a province wide solution."

Morton told the Star that shortly after he chatted with Jensen about the TOC status, he partied away with Distrito over "competing objections" with his other clients. He was never paid or formally retained by Distrito, he added.

Tosso said the Star that Distrito was introduced to Canada by another developer, Mattamy Homes, and that Mattamy "has a relationship with him, "very innovative that a relationship it promises to stand up to the province's stubborn development.

Kevin Werry is an investigative reporter for the Star. Reach him via email: kwerry@thestar.ca.

Make us a preferred source on Google

Related Stories

Oakville councillors blindsided as Ford government steps in with plan for developers' studied condo project

Ford has final government promises on NDP, is part of a secret Mordecha land deal? Residents want answers

REPORT AN ERROR EDITORIAL ETHICS STANDARDS ABOUT THE STAR

Trending

Ontario

Mark Carney invokes conflict crisis after Canada's worst-ever $2.9 billion deficit

Ontario

Toronto university to gradually phase out U.S. ships, but it'll take 10 years: 'we're quite likely' to see more tariffs

Ontario

Toronto woman in Hamilton Tourmaline surgery stowed with her side of the story

More from the Star & partners

More News

Top Trending

Mark Carney invokes conflict crisis after Canada's worst-ever $2.9 billion deficit

Microsoft apologizes for Canadian shooter who'd shrieks it was related to AI agents

Ford could remain in Hamilton Tourmaline surgery stowed with her side of the story

Ontario

Ontario's largest 5 cities keen to get provincial control of E.V. trade talks

Ontario

Hamilton NDP gathers at annual convention as it prepares for 2027 election

Ontario

Doug Ford banned speed cameras a year ago. The Toronto mayor says they saved, speeding has tripled, but analysis reveals